This luncheon is always a wonderful event for AFEE, and I encourage those of you who will be in Atlanta for the meetings to join us to honor Glen Atkinson for his work on behalf of AFEE. Because AFEE must pay up front for all meals that are reserved as of early December, and because we will be able to take only a very few walk-ins at the door on January 3rd, I strongly encourage those of you who are interested in attending this luncheon to make advance reservations. You can do so by sending in the reservation form and forwarding it along with your payment to me in care of the Department of Economics, Bucknell University, Lewisburg, PA, 17837, or by fax to me at (570) 577-2372 by December 1st. You can also email the relevant information (name, desired entrée, number of guests, and credit card information) to afee@bucknell.edu. We will be unable to accept cancellations after December 8th.

Welcome

The Association for Evolutionary Economics (AFEE) is an international organization of economists and other social scientists devoted to analysis of economics as evolving, socially constructed and politically governed systems. AFEE publishes the Journal of Economic Issues \(JEI\).

The intellectual heritage of AFEE is that of the Original Institutional Economics (OIE) created and developed by early twentieth-century economists such as Thorstein Veblen, John R. Commons, and Wesley Mitchell. Over recent decades, this legacy has evolved to address such contemporary issues as:

- o The role of diverse cultures in economic performance.
- o Domestic and international inequalities of income.
- o The roles of social, economic and political power in shaping economic outcomes.
- o Globalization and the increasing weight of multinational corporations in the international economy.
- o The need for expanding use of modern technologies to relieve want.
- o The urgent need to for awareness of the impact of new technology on the biosphere.
- o The ways in which economic thought is affected by and affects always changing economics.
