Agric. Econ. – Czech

Majerová V.: Social factors influencing the differences between developed and less developed regions

Agric. Econ. – Czech, 53 (2007): 513-517

The aim of the rural development programs is the stabilisation of rural population and forming the perspectives for increasing the quality of life for all social groups in the communities as well as in the region. Less developed areas suffer for a long term from the cumulated negative factors of economic and social development. Their detailed identification which is theoretically considered in this paper can help to improve the particular measures towards the removal of the most urgent problems.

Keywords:

Czech countryside, quality of life, less favoured areas
