Title: The evolution of the juvenile delinquency and the settlement of a different penal treatment

Author(s): Laura Roxana Popoviciu;

Keywords: deviant behaviour, pathologic character, penal responsibility

Abstract:

The juvenile delinquency is one of the deviance forms, having great implications over both the individual and groups; the deviant behaviour refers to different conduct forms that are closely passing by the norms in a culture, that correspond to social roles and statuses, very well established in the given culture. It is a type of conduct that is opposite to the conventional and conformist one that consist not only in law breaking, but also in any "deviation" conduct without any pathologic character that was medically established and represents a digression from the social rules, being defined and resented like this by the social group members.
