Globalisation & regionalisation

Agric. Econ. – Czech, 48

What regards the vision of relationship of the global & liberalisation, two variants. According to the first, mult go on perpetually around t trajectory and gradually w the processes of internatic interdependence, accelera condensing net of trans-na corporations and their acti regionalism. According to regionalism will, directly or indirectly, contribute to the development of multilateralism, spread the influence of several macro-regions, and shape the transitive stage to the unified world economy. In both cases, it is of course the visions of a matter-of-fact type. In the future, the region, there will further exploit comparative advantages, influence the volumes and production and trade, as well as in specific fields of economic activity. However, that changes no fact, that namely multilateralism contributes to a considerable extent to reaching a higher equilibrium, adaptability and coherence.
