Australasian Journal of Information Systems, Vol 6, No 1 (1998)

HOME ABOUT LOGIN REGISTER SEARCH CURRENT ARCHIVES ANNOUNCEMENTS

Home > Vol 6, No 1 (1998) > Verenikina

Tool Based Psychology as a Philosophy of Technology

Irina Verenikina, Edward Gould

Abstract

This paper examines the influence of psychology in the area of human computer interaction and information technology in general. Cognitive psychology is critically examined and its shortcomings in guiding technological development outlined. As a possible alternation psychological framework of activity theory introduced. This Russian development provide a more extensive basis for human computer interaction and holds some promise as a framework for the development of computer systems more compatible with the

Full Text: PDF