Necrotizing Fasciitis of vulva: A report of two cases

Jamal A, Yazdanbod M

Abstract:

Vulvar necrotizing fasciitis is an uncommon infectious disorder. Since the first reported cases almost 100 years ago, necrotizing fasciitis continues to present a diagnostic and therapeutic challenge. What usually begins as a subtle infection can become life-threatening. We report two cases of vulvar necrotizing fasciitis, one after posterior colporrhaphy in a woman with four risk factors and the other in a young woman without any risk factor.
