FIVE QUESTIONS FOR THE EXPERTS

"The growing consensus...is that schools aren't attracting or retaining the most able teachers or training them effectively—and students lose out as a consequence."

Jane Hannaway, director of the Urban Institute's Education Policy Center, answers five questions about reforming the teaching profession. Hannaway is coeditor of Creating a New Teaching Profession (Urban Institute Press, 2009), a book that spells out bold reforms for the way schools attract, retain, evaluate, and train teachers, arguing that the best way to improve the nation's schools is to improve teacher quality.
