

SUBJECTS OF THE CHAPTERS

	PAGE
I. Man is the highest, the most absolute, and the most excellent of things created . . . . .	25
II. The ultimate end of man is beyond this life . . . . .	27
III. This life is but a preparation for eternity . . . . .	32
IV. There are three stages in the preparation for eternity: to know oneself (and with oneself all things); to rule oneself; and to direct oneself to God . . . . .	36
V. The seeds of these three (learning, virtue, religion) are naturally implanted in us . . . . .	40
VI. If a man is to be produced, it is necessary that he be formed by education . . . . .	52
VII. A man can most easily be formed in early youth, and cannot be formed properly except at this age . . . . .	57
VIII. The young must be educated in common, and for this schools are necessary . . . . .	61
IX. All the young of both sexes should be sent to school . . . . .	66
X. The instruction given in schools should be universal . . . . .	70

	PAGE
XI. Hitherto there have been no perfect schools . . . . .	76
XII. It is possible to reform schools . . . . .	81
XIII. The basis of school reform must be exact order in all things . . . . .	93
XIV. The exact order of instruction must be borrowed from nature . . . . .	98
XV. The basis of the prolongation of life . . . . .	104
XVI. The universal requirements of teaching and of learning; that is to say, a method of teaching and of learning with such certainty that the desired result must of necessity follow . . . . .	111
XVII. The principles of facility in teaching and in learning . . . . .	127
XVIII. The principles of thoroughness in teaching and in learning . . . . .	142
XIX. The principles of conciseness and rapidity in teaching . . . . .	160
XX. The method of the sciences, specifically . . . . .	183
XXI. The method of the arts . . . . .	194
XXII. The method of languages . . . . .	203
XXIII. The method of morals . . . . .	211
XXIV. The method of instilling piety . . . . .	218
XXV. If we wish to reform schools in accordance with the laws of true Christianity, we must remove from them books written by pagans, or, at any rate, must use them with more caution than hitherto . . . . .	231
XXVI. Of school discipline . . . . .	249

---

	PAGE
XXVII. Of the fourfold division of schools, based on age and acquirements . . .	255
XXVIII. Sketch of the Mother-School . . .	259
XXIX. Sketch of the Vernacular-School . . .	266
XXX. Sketch of the Latin-School . . .	274
XXXI. Of the University, of travelling students, of the College of Light . . .	281
XXXII. Of the universal and perfect order of in- struction . . . . .	287
XXXIII. Of the things requisite before this universal method can be put into practice . . .	295